Part Five:
Change and Me

Session Five: Change and Me

Introduction

This session allows young people to examine their own behaviour in relation to the Model of Stages of Change. It also provides them with an opportunity to identify some of the steps to change and who can support them in trying to change their behaviour.

Aims

1. To identify that there are a number of different stages to their own behaviour.

2. To try and clarify what would be happening at each stage of change.

3. To look at what would need to happen for them to move to the next stage of change and who could help with this process.

©Atkinson 2005

Activity 5a: My Wheel of Change

This activity is designed to help the young person consider a behaviour relevant to them in terms of the Model of Stages of Change.

You will need

☑ The young person's completed activity sheets from activities 4b and 4c.
☑ Activity Sheet 4a (ii) The Wheel of Change for the young person to refer to ☑ Activity Sheet 4c (ii) Feelings and emotions. A useful prompt.
☑ Activity Sheet 5a My Wheel of Change
☑ Coloured pencils

What to do

- Ask the young person to think of a behaviour that may be causing them problems, or is relevant to them at the moment.

- Look at Activity Sheet 5a, My Wheel of Change. Using The Wheel of Change (Activity Sheet 4a (ii)) as a prompt, ask the young person if they can think of what might happen at each of the stages of change. Ask them to write a sentence in each of the boxes on Activity Sheet 5a (or scribe comments, if appropriate). They may also like to identify a colour, shape and emotion to accompany each statement. An example of one young person's response is provided in Table 4.

- If the young person has difficulty identifying what might happen at some of the stages of change, these can be left for later. It might be more difficult for the young person to think about what might be at stages of change they have not yet experienced. If this is the case, try and encourage them to think about what is happening now, what stage of change this represents and what might be different at the next stage.

Table 4 - Case Study Example

This is an example provided by David, a Year 9 pupil. The behaviour he identified was "Staying away from the Police"

Stage of change	Statement	Shape	Emotion
Prethinking	Not bothered. Can't do anything to me. I didn't go to school as well.	□ "stuck in a box going nowhere"	No control
Thinking	I've been to court and I have realised they can do something to me but I'm thinking about it.	○ "things going round in your head 'cos you're thinking"	Worried
Deciding	I am going to change because I am on my last legs with the courts.	⊘ "no more of the behaviour"	Scared
Doing	I am now staying away from the police and going to school.	"school" △ "home" "probation"	In control
Maintaining	I now haven't arrested for about 8 months and I have been going to school.	☆ "I'm a star"	I feel I've done well
Relapsing	I could end up in the wrong gang and mess up again.	↯ "this means you're going down"	I don't even want to talk about this because it won't happen

Activity 5b: What needs to happen?

This activity helps the young person and the facilitator to clarify what support might help the young person to move to the next stage of change.

You will need

☑ Activity Sheet 5b What needs to happen?
☑ Pen/pencil

What to do

- Look at Activity Sheet 5b, What needs to happen? Ask the young person to write the behaviour identified in Activity 5a in the top left hand corner.

- Referring to Activity 5a, ask the young person to think about which stage they are at on the Wheel of Change. Write this in the left hand box along with what is currently happening.

- Now ask them to write in the right hand box what the next stage of change would be and what would be happening then.

- Ask the young person what they would need to do to move to the next stage.

- Ask the young person to identify if there are others who can help (e.g. teachers, family members, friends). Write these names in the boxes along with what they could be doing.

- Try to help the young person to identify practical things that other people can do. For example it might not be possible for "Dad to come back" or "For my Geography teacher to never shout", although these statements may given you insight into situations and every day events the young person finds difficult.

©Atkinson 2005

Plenary

Discuss Activities 5a and 5b with the young person. Agree a plan for what will happen next. Decide who will inform the other people about how they might help and how this will be done (e.g. by photocopying the completed Activity Sheet 5b and talking to people about it).

Arrange a further meeting to discuss outcomes and monitor progress. Activities from Sections 4 and 5 can be used as ongoing monitoring of the young person's progress through the Wheel of Change.

Activity Sheet 5a: My wheel of change

Can you think of a behaviour that might be (or might have been) a problem for you, your family or your teachers? Write the behaviour in the space below then see if you can find a statement about what you might be doing at each stage of the wheel of change, in relatior to that behaviour. If you wish, you may like to think about a shape, colour and feeling associated with each stage.

Behaviour……

Stage One - Prethinking

Shape	Colour	Feeling

Stage Two - Thinking

Shape	Colour	Feeling

Stage Three - Deciding

Shape	Colour	Feeling

Stage Four - Doing

Shape	Colour	Feeling

Stage Five - Maintaining

Shape	Colour	Feeling

Stage Six - Relapsing

Shape	Colour	Feeling

©Atkinson 2005

Activity Sheet 5b: What Needs to Happen?

Behaviour……..

Present stage of change

What is happening now?

What do I need to do?

Stage I'm aiming for next

What will be happening then?

Who else can help?
(write names on the lines in the shapes)

……

……

……

……

What do they need to be doing?
(write ideas in the shapes)

©Atkinson 2005